General Election 2005: BNP - We are now Britain's 4th party

THE 2005 General Election saw the British National Party clearly emerge as Britain's fourth most organised and influential political party.

Despite a virtual media blackout on coverage of the BNP during the whole four week campaign and an orchestrated smear campaign by a hostile press in London and Yorkshire, the people of Britain turned to the British National Party in significant numbers.

Seat after seat saw BNP candidates increase their share of the vote and there were some excellent results in seats being contested for the very first time.

In only a handful of seats (10) did UKIP candidates get marginally more votes than a BNP candidate, whereas our candidates beat UKIP in 66 seats. There was no spectacular support for the chameleon of Robert Kilroy-Silk's Veritas Party who had stolen the BNP's clothing on immigration and Europe. Only in Veritas's showcase seat of Erewash where Kilroy-Silk was standing, did any of their candidates beat the BNP.

In addition, BNP candidates beat the Greens in 25 seats, while Green Party candidates beat the BNP in just 6 seats. We are not just an ephemeral pressure group ready to be used by the establishment and dumped when we no longer fit their agenda; we are the real voice of patriotic nationalism.

OIL CRISIS TO CHANGE OUR WORLD

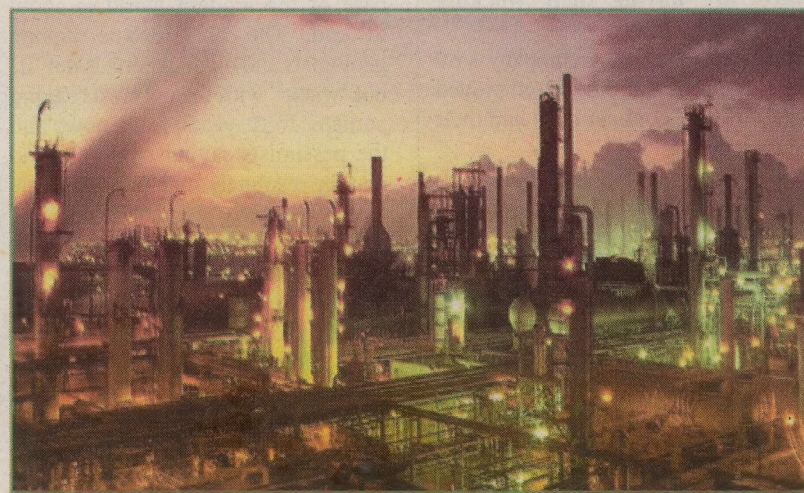

- Global oil extraction is likely to peak between 2006 and 2015
- Oilfield production peaks are followed by rapid falls in productivity
- No other energy source is as efficient as oil
- 99% of our transport energy comes from oil
- No practical alternative yet exists to close the energy gap

by Nick Griffin

THE GREAT AGE of oil transformed the world. Over the past century this one-off natural bounty of fossil energy created our modern industrial civilisation, quadrupled the population, and gave those people residing in the developed world a superb standard of living.

Back in the 1970s, environmentalists warned that all this was about to come to an end as oil ran out. When it didn't, the various disasters predicted for a world without oil were forgotten about. Promising alternative energy investment programmes were closed down as politicians of all hues carried on planning for ever-lasting economic growth fuelled by an ever-growing energy supply. But those politicians were wrong and so were the environmentalists. The problem never was that oil is going to run out, with industrial civilisation collapsing when the last barrel is gone. The truth is that this will never happen.

The real problem is that approximately half of the world's oil reserves

END OF AN ERA: Experts warn that supplies of 'easy accessed' oil have peaked and that oil production will see a steep and irreversible decline.

– the easily found, easily tapped and easily refined half – have already gone. This happened in the United States in 1971 and it happened in the North Sea in 2000. It will probably happen in South America next year, in China the year after that, and in the Middle East in 2009.

Of course, new fields are still being discovered, but they tend to be smaller and to take much more energy to exploit. They will help delay the time when oil actually runs out, but they cannot delay the moment when overall global production peaks, and goes into permanent, steep and irreversible decline.

World demand for oil – particularly in China and India – continues to rocket. The PeakOil crossover between rising demand and falling supply will cause almost immediate economic agony in a globalised world economy addicted to cheap energy and cheap transport. This will lead to a series of 'oil-shock'

Industry in chaos

by Steve Johnson

SO MG Rover has finally fallen and with it has gone 5000 jobs at the century-old West Midlands motor works, along with tens of thousands more in suppliers and other businesses dependent on Longbridge for their livelihood. Marconi is also going – laying off 450 workers in Coventry and shutting down the Edge Hill plant in Liverpool, which in 1912 made the world's first automatic telephone exchange, with another 300 highly-skilled jobs lost. It is looking as though even the global giants are in trouble with IBM laying off 13,000 workers across Europe, 1,500 in Britain. The world's biggest car-makers are also tottering. Ford and General Motors have had their stock downgraded by investment funds to 'junk bond' status, whilst Daimler-Chrysler lost a billion pounds on the Mercedes passenger car operation in the first quarter of 2005. And all the while the tidal wave of cheap Chinese imports sweeps onward, higher and higher, swamping

Jobs going to China

Government's blueprint for our economic future is a strategy built on sand

NO JOB, NO FUTURE: Rover workers hear their factory is closing and the company's famous marques have already been sold to China where Chinese workers will produce imitation Rover and MG cars.

the industries not just of Britain but of America and Europe as well. As we predicted in last month's Freedom, the Chinese didn't even want to take over Rover. The Shanghai Automotive Industry Corporation had already bought the Rover and MG brands, which was all they really wanted. Now they can slap our once proudly British badge on the bonnet of the imitation Rovers they can make much cheaper in China.

Marconi is collapsing because it lost the contract to build Britain's next generation BT telephone network to Chinese combine Huawei. IBM has already sold off its once-world-leading PC arm to the Chinese, and is reeling from cheap Chinese imports. Western car-makers live in growing dread of the cheap Chinese import challenge now gathering pace and about to sweep down on a showroom near you.

Even Rolls-Royce aero engines, employing 23,000 highly-skilled British workers at seven UK plants, is ominously only prepared to commit itself to stay in Britain "as long as we are competitive here". After that, once the growing number of skilled Chinese engineering workers can make Rolls-Royce engines at a fraction of the cost of First World workers, no doubt Rolls-Royce too will shut down here and move to China, in as exactly the same way as Rover. Many of the jobs and industries now being now, at IBM, Marconi etc. are in the very high-tech, modern, 'knowledge-based' industries which were supposed to be our economic future. A future that turns out to be built on sand. As Sir Geoffrey Owen of the London School of Economics recently warned; "it is perfectly sensible to be worried by the absence in Britain of large, nationally owned, research-intensive high-technology businesses". These increasingly absent businesses and industries were supposed to replace the jobs being lost in droves in the traditional 'metal-bashing' engineering and manufacturing sector, in which Britain once led the world. According to Tory, Labour and Lib-Dem evangelists of the cult of Free Trade and globalisation, this was supposed to be our future. We are seeing it, and it's not working. In fact, it's being shut down and sold off to China.

British staff sidelined at Alton Towers

BRITISH employees, both part time and full time, at Alton Towers, the theme park in Staffordshire, are having their working hours cut by half. However, none of the company's 80 Slovakian workers, who are employed on a different contract have had their hours reduced. "It's just a cost-cutting manoeuvre", an Alton Towers worker told Freedom. "Experienced British staff are being sidelined, to make way for foreign workers who do the job for half the money. My worry is that many of them don't understand English so are unclear on what instructions they have been given, and that's when accidents can happen."

Ban the BNP

A coalition of ethnic minority organisations has issued a list of demands to the Government. Operation Black Vote wants all-black shortlists for MPs and the banning of the British National Party.

Too many over here

A Mori poll for the BBC Asian Network to test opinion amongst people of Indian, Pakistani and Bangladeshi origin living in Britain found that 60% thought there were already too many immigrants living in the UK.

PeakOil: the crisis that will change our world recessions, each getting deeper as energy gets more expensive. But each recession, although triggered by soaring oil costs, will then lead to a brief crash in the oil price, something that will make it all but impossible for market-driven economies to develop economically viable alternative energy sources. The whole debt-and-cheap-energy base of the modern world is about to end. The only debate among geologists and other experts is not 'if' but 'when', with the optimists saying perhaps forty years from now, and the pessimists saying next year and that the resolutely high price of crude today is an early warning sign.

PeakOil is why George Bush has invaded Iraq and might soon invade Iran. It is not about boosting profits for US oil companies, or with making the Middle East safe for Israel. It's not even about securing cheap oil. It is about securing oil at any price.

PeakOil is why the Labour government is shortly going to start softening up public opinion for a massive programme of building new power stations powered by imported natural gas, followed by a fresh wave

Only the British National Party has a programme of policies to avert the crisis

- An end to the fuel-guzzling insanity of globalisation
- Windfall taxes on multi-national companies and banks, to be used for developing alternative energy systems
- A programme to shift food production from energy inefficient agri-business back to sustainable organic family farms
- An immediate end to road and airport runway building. Switch funds to making public transport work again.
- End the immigration that is fuelling Britain's unsustainable population boom. We need a steady decline in the UK population, drifting down to no more than 30 million.
- Keep Britain out of America's Oil Wars. Not one single British serviceman should be sacrificed just to allow the USA to keep guzzling oil for a few years longer.

of nuclear power stations.

PeakOil is why Japanese car companies are selling hybrid fuel cars, and why oil giant British Petroleum is spending a fortune in advertising to get across the idea that BP now stands for 'Beyond Petroleum'.

But whatever advertising gimmicks the oil companies come up with, and however much 'too little, too late' alternative power sources are brought on stream by big companies or by governments, the PeakOil crisis cannot be avoided.

PeakOil is going to transform our world – your world. Forget about economic growth. Forget about rising prosperity. No government in the world will be able to deliver those once global oil energy production is in decline, and any politicians who say otherwise will be lying.

NEW DIRECTION: Britain must invest in public transport using money that would normally go on road and airport expansion. Food production should return to sustainable organic family-run farms.

TRADITION: Local cocklers using the Jumbo Board to harvest cockles.

Plundered cockle beds forced to close

MORECAMBE Bay's cockle beds, which have been plundered over the last 12 months by gangs of illegal immigrants, have been closed to protect their dwindling fishing stocks.

The North Western and North Wales Sea Fisheries Committee took the decision after a survey found the numbers of adult and juvenile cockles had been drastically reduced.

Local fishermen have tenderly harvested the sand banks for generations, collecting cockles, shrimps and muscles, but now their livelihoods are threatened because of over-fishing of this natural resource by illegal cocklers from China and Eastern Europe.

Exams marked in India

EXAM papers for GCSEs are to be sent to India for marking because examination markers there are paid a fifth of those in Britain. AQA, Britain's main examination board, has signed a contract for history, French, German and Italian papers to be marked in India.

Labour is losing support to the BNP

LABOUR is losing its traditional support base to the British National Party because it is targeting the middle classes and deserting Britain's working class. After scrutinising the General Election results, advisers and MPs within the Labour Party are sounding alarm bells over the extent of the growing BNP support in Labour's heartland.

"The working class are beginning to develop an allegiance with the BNP."

Jon Cruddas, MP

Jon Cruddas, MP for Dagenham, and former adviser to Tony Blair is warning of an increased swing to the BNP in next year's local elections.

"The working class are beginning to develop a class allegiance with the BNP; the Labour party has, in their eyes, deserted them."

"The British National Party is taking a rational approach to the political repositioning of New Labour," he said.

"The BNP will gain more council seats in May and possibly hold the balance of power in Bradford."

Ann Cryer, MP

Ann Cryer MP, who saw the BNP poll over 9% in her Keighley constituency, said she was worried the BNP would gain more council seats next May and possibly take the balance of power in Bradford.

Another adviser, Liz Carnelley, said: "White communities are feeling disaffected as though no one is listening to them, so much so that they are voting for the British National Party." She said the BNP responded to "genuine local grievances such as the lack of affordable housing".

"The BNP is responding to genuine local grievances such as the lack of affordable housing"

Liz Carnelley

Denis MacShane, the Labour MP for Rotherham, said the BNP had taken advantage of politicians' failure to "change the lives of too many working-class people in poorer estates". Responding to reports on the growth of the BNP in The Guardian and The Independent, British National Party press officer, Phil Edwards, said: "We have progressed a lot in the last three years, and are now moving away from being a fringe party and into the mainstream. We consider ourselves to be Britain's fourth party."

Unhealthy diet threatens our children's future

BRITISH CHILDREN are suffering behavioural and learning disorders because their diets are deficient in vital nutrients essential for normal brain development and function. That is the finding of a study conducted by researchers from Oxford University's department of physiology after tests showed 40% of underachieving and disruptive children given supplements high in omega-3 essential fats (contained in fish oils) showed a dramatic improvement in concentration and behaviour.

Symptoms associated with attention deficit and hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) were also reduced and there was a significant improvement in reading and spelling.

Fish oils are largely missing from modern processed diets and this has led to a fourfold increase in disorders such as ADHD, dyslexia and dyspraxia in the past 20 years.

MISSING: Fish oils are not present in modern processed diets.

This was clearly illustrated in a recent Channel Five documentary 'Classroom Chaos' which showed pupils talking back to teachers, fighting and generally behaving badly. A situation confirmed by the Teacher Support Network, which reported that it was receiving more calls to its help line about behavioural problems than ever before.

Our children's diets today are inadequate for their basic needs, and it's not only behaviour problems that are caused by this poor diet. The low-cost, junk food diet served up in British schools is fuelling an obesity epidemic among young children.

Official figures published this month by the Department of Health showed that more than a quarter of two to ten year-olds in England are overweight and one in seven is obese. Childhood obesity has tripled in 20 years, a condition that has been linked to cancer, heart disease, diabetes, renal failure, osteoarthritis and psychological damage. The report calculates that the economic cost in England alone could be £7.4bn a year, a figure that will rapidly rise.

Healthy eating messages are "drowned out" by the advertising budgets of large food companies. Market leaders in the food industry - Coca-Cola, McDonald's, Walkers - all offer unhealthy food options yet aim their advertising at children. Junk food manufacturers should be banned from advertising during children's television, as should the use of popular characters such as Scooby-Doo, Bagpuss, Winnie the Pooh and The Simpsons to sell unhealthy food high in levels of fat, salt or sugar which make it more difficult for parents to refuse their children these foods.

We must change the diet of our children and their lifestyle to include more exercise if the rising trend of bad behaviour and obesity is to be halted. No one can turn a blind eye to this epidemic, which if left unchecked will see children die before their parents.

Workers told to train their Romanian replacements

WORKERS at a seat belt factory in Carlisle in Cumbria have been told to train the Romanian workers who will be taking their jobs.

Two-thirds of the 242-strong workforce at Key Safety Systems UK, are facing the sack because production is being transferred to Romania. To add insult to injury, senior managers have told those being made redundant to train 44 new employees from Romania how to do their jobs.

One disillusioned worker at the factory told Freedom:

"The workforce have been treated very badly. Our union should be fighting tooth and nail to keep our jobs in Carlisle but the union representative just shrugged his shoulders and said exporting British jobs to Eastern Europe was the way of industry nowadays."

"When I broached the subject of Romanian workers actually taking our jobs here in the city, he said he wouldn't listen to such talk because it was racist.

"To me it's like being back in the 1980s, British workers are being sacrificed so the bosses can make bigger profits for themselves and their shareholders."

Key Safety Systems UK managing director, Isaac Wharton, said the Carlisle workforce was "highly skilled," but the company had to cut production costs and was moving to Romania.

No funds for flower show or St George

A MARKET town's traditional flower show and St. George's Day parade were cancelled because the local council couldn't afford stewards to police the events.

The Boston Horticultural, Flower and Craft Show draws thousands of visitors every year with exhibitions of traction engines, flower displays, prize-winning vegetables, animals and home-made crafts.

The St. George's Day procession, organised by local Scout and Guide groups, was scaled down from a march through the town centre to a shuffle down the local parish church aisle.

Doreen Akrill, leader of the 16th Boston Rainbows, Brownies and Guides, said: "It is such a pity. The kids love the parade, and we are all very disappointed. Another tradition has bitten the dust."

But there's no shortage of funds for Boston Council's asylum seekers housing support programme. Its website boasts of a "free and comprehensive advice and information service" with a "wide range of leaflets, numerous information booklets" and "advice officers ready to talk about particular circumstances".

FLOWER SHOW: Another British tradition bites the dust.

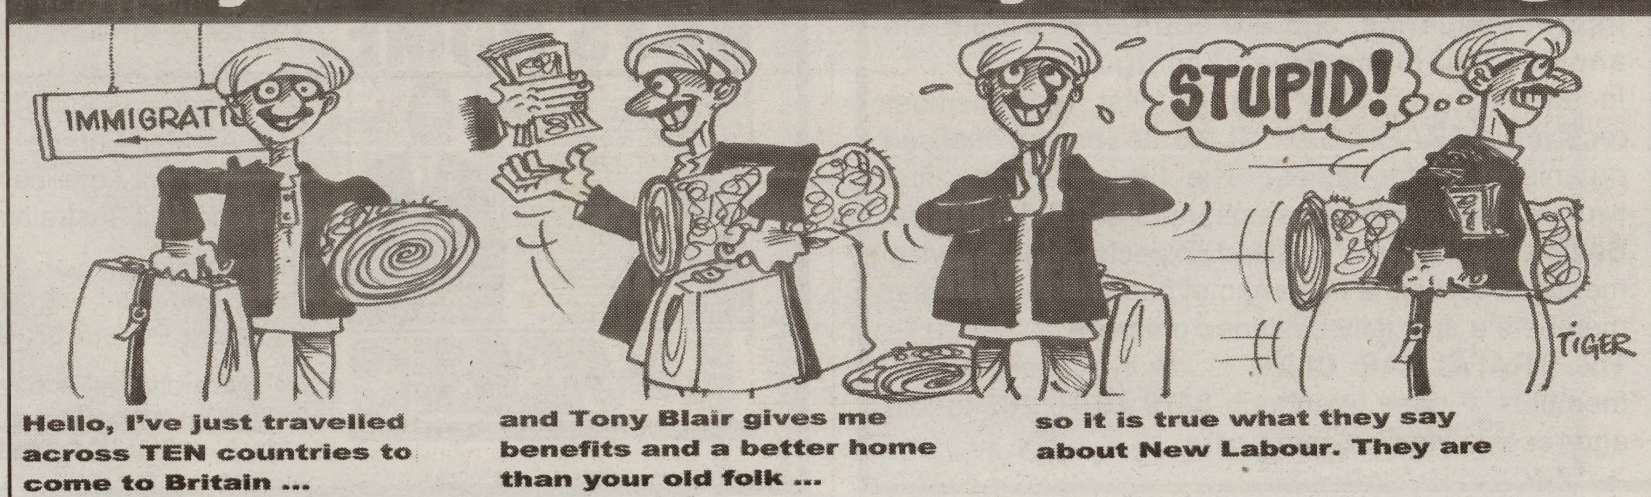

EU targets newsagents

THOUSANDS of the UK's small newsagents will be forced to close because EU policy demands they change the way newspapers and magazines are delivered.

At present, Britain's 'universal supply code' ensures that 99 per cent of people can buy publications in the most obscure parts of the country and pay the same price.

But the EU says this practice breaches its competition rules and must stop.

Do you know what they are thinking?

NO ARRESTS: Police stand by and allow the demonstrators to burn effigies and flags and call for terrorists to attack Britain and America.

Police chiefs happy with Islam's 'kill and bomb' demo

Union flags burnt and a Christian cross set on fire

JUST 48 hours after BNP chairman, Nick Griffin, was in court because of a speech expressing the disquiet of many about the growth of Islamic extremism in Britain, a Muslim demonstration in London was calling for more acts of terrorism and "another 9/11".

As an effigy of Tony Blair was burnt along with the Union flag and a Christian cross, organisers with megaphones led the demonstrators in chants of, "Kill, kill USA, kill, kill George Bush" and "Bomb, bomb New York".

Most of the mob of 500 had their faces covered with scarves and waved 'Islam will dominate the world' placards, but despite the threatening nature of the demonstration, the police stood by and made no arrests.

Later, in response to a query from the BNP, the Metropolitan Police said that it would be unlikely that officers would be studying the video tape of the demonstration to see if any laws had been broken.

The protest, organised by the Muslim Council for Britain and the Muslim Parliamentary Association of the UK, was in response to the discredited story published by American magazine, Newsweek, alleging that US soldiers at Guantanamo Bay had abused the Koran.

NICK GRIFFIN: The only politician to express disquiet at the alarming growth of Islam in Britain.

Labour caught red-handed with their 'bogus Independents'

THE RETURNING officer for the Dewsbury parliamentary constituency in West Yorkshire and the Electoral Commission are to investigate an attempt by the Labour Party to hijack an independent candidate's campaign to draw votes away from the British National Party.

Alan Girvan had intended to stand under an independent banner in the campaign but withdrew from the contest after his election literature was changed without his consent to appeal to potential BNP voters.

Mr Girvan had been approached by a gentleman posing as 'a sympathetic businessman' who offered to arrange funding to pay his election deposit and for the printing of his election address. But this sympathetic businessman was none other than prominent Labour Party activist and leading anti-BNP campaigner, Terry McKay, who proceeded to change all the wording of the Independent's election address so as to make it similar to BNP leaflets being put out.

In a letter to the returning officer, Alan Girvan says: "While I was initially informed my campaign as an independent would be supported by payment and some printing without any interference with regards to my policies, I have now discovered this was a very elaborate plot to use my campaign to dilute votes, predominantly from the BNP candidate."

BIG VOTE: David Exley (rosette) still received 5,066 votes (13.1%), a credible achievement in a constituency where nearly half the electorate are Muslim.

The Labour Party denied any involvement in the deception, but Mr Girvan has passed on audio tape and written evidence indicating that Terry McKay played the leading role in the charade, at the same time as he was campaigning for Dewsbury's Labour candidate, Shahid Malik.

Eddy Butler, from the BNP's Election Department, said that Labour Party sponsored Independent candidates were now appearing quite regularly in a desperate effort to limit the BNP vote in areas where the party was starting to make an impact.

"We have had two bogus Independent candidates in Stoke in the last month alone," Eddy told Freedom. "But this one was slightly different because he was a genuine Independent candidate who had his campaign hijacked. Doesn't this just show the arrogance of New Labour and the contempt they have for our democratic system?"

Recruitment campaign 'foolhardy'

MOD mole worried over lure of 'high-quality training'

THE CAMPAIGN by the head of Britain's armed forces to encourage more Muslims to join up has worried a number of key personnel within the military.

At a rally at the Islamic Cultural Centre in Regent's Park, General Sir Michael Walker, the chief of defence staff, said the army offered 'high-quality training and a fulfilling career' for new recruits.

Recruiting Muslims is a deliberate strategy, with the Ministry of Defence recently appointing a Muslim adviser to oversee the whole strategy.

In the past the British army has restricted the number of recruits from ethnic minorities in the interests of keeping fighting units 'cohesive', but now political correctness and Government pressure has forced the services to change.

"I'm very worried and feel this policy has been ill-thought out," one MOD 'adviser' emailed Freedom.

"The theatre of the war on terror today is within the sphere of Islam, so to actively recruit soldiers from a community where a small but significant number of young men are hostile to our goals seems foolhardy. To word this as carefully as possible, it could be suggested that the wrong sort of Muslims might take advantage of Michael Walker's offer of "high-quality training".

Help us consolidate these vital gains

A personal appeal from Nick Griffin

AS A direct result of last month's General Election the British National Party now has £55,000-worth of digital printing equipment.

This equipment, which includes the latest computer-linked A3 digital duplicators; three folding machines, and a heavy duty power guillotine, was stretched to its very limits to produce nearly 6,000,000 election addresses in the time available.

It is, however, purpose-built for the key job for which we have bought it – printing short runs of local community newsletters in our target wards between now and next April, and the record number of local election addresses that we will need next May.

The acquisition of all this equipment for significantly less than what we would have had to pay to get the leaflets printed commercially (albeit to a somewhat higher quality), makes that goal very much more achievable.

Making the most of this big new resource base now has to be our top priority. Already our Elections and Publicity Departments are working on a new plan to produce regular standardised 'localisable' leaflet blue-prints, and for a series of training days around the country to maximise the number of branches able to use them really well.

Our AudioVisual Department made our television and radio broadcasts entirely 'in-house' for the first time ever. Once again, we were able to buy the equipment needed to do this for roughly the same amount it would have cost us to hire professionals. Here too, then, we have got the very maximum value for money out of the limited funds we had to spend on the General Election.

Of course the BNP, like all the parties, incurred debts to fight the General Election. The Tories for instance, now owe a staggering £16 million. On May 6th, by contrast, the British National Party owed just under £25,000, mainly for commercial printing in our key areas and the cost of some deposits.

By the time you read this, most of that will have been paid off, leaving us with the extra assets, skills and experience which will allow us to make the next big step forward.

But that step is also going to need money – and now, not next year. We need money now to provide the software and training to a regional network of local newsletter co-ordinators. We need now money to keep the largest administrative machine the British nationalist movement has ever seen running smoothly. We need money now to improve the training and support we can give fund-holders and fund-raisers. We need money now to strengthen our regional organisations to allow greater decentralisation of responsibility.

This is why we make no apologies for making this big, urgent appeal for fresh funds, even though we know that the General Election has left many people with empty pockets and smaller than usual pay packets. Now is the time to press forward with our new advantages.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need and an end to field trials of genetically modified crops.

FARMING & FISHING: The regeneration of British farming, with the objective of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food. The restoration of the fishing industry through protection of our traditional fishing grounds.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

BARKING TOPS THE BNP POLL

GENERAL ELECTION ROUND-UP

AS EXPECTED, Barking in Essex provided the British National Party with its best vote of the General Election with an excellent 4,916 votes.

This was an encouraging 17% of the total vote cast and something of an achievement in the face of media coverage monopolised by the three main parties for all of the four-week campaign. BNP candidate Richard Barnbrook was delighted with the size of the vote but disappointed not to have secured that coveted second place, finishing just an agonising 27 votes behind the Tories.

David Exley in Dewsbury, who ran the Liberal Democrats close for third place with his 5066 votes (13%), provided the BNP with its second best vote, and Len Starr in Burnley 'picked up the bronze' with his 4003 votes, nearly 11% of the total vote. In fact the BNP team in Burnley know their vote would have been considerably higher had it not been for the intervention of Independent candidate, Harry Brooks, who polled an incredible 5787. Harry, who also runs on an anti-immigration platform, is something of a celebrity in Burnley having led the town's Independent group on the council for many years. There was a clutch of constituencies where the party polled over 9% with

THE LADIES OF BARKING LEAFLET
It was a big hit with voters and even made the national press

Nick Griffin in Keighley, Simon Darby in Dudley North, Lawrence Rustem in Dagenham and James Lloyd in West Bromwich West, along with their campaign teams all deserving a pat-on-the-back. For a relatively new party trying to take its place within the mainstream of British politics, one priority is to preserve our meagre resources, so saving a deposit was a major achievement and congratulations must go out to the candidates and election campaigners in those constituencies where that 5% threshold was gained. Commiserations to those party workers in the 21 seats where we secured over 4% of the vote but just fell short of that all important target. As with the European Elections last June, the BNP polled strongly in many of the 118 constituencies contested without actually achieving anything spectacular. Steady progress was the order of the day and although there was quite a wide variation in the party's percentages, not one of the results could be described as 'disappointing'.

Even in Wales and Scotland where the BNP has struggled in the past, to take around 3% of the vote in the four seats contested provided a very satisfactory return on the effort put in.

BATTLEBUS: Barking candidate, Richard Barnbrook with his loudspeaker van which toured the constituency tirelessly in the final week of the campaign.

15,776 votes for BNP mayor

STOKE British National Party have every reason to be proud of their efforts in their local Mayoral Election where Steve Batkin was just 435 votes of securing a run-off with the Labour candidate.

If Steve had made it into the runners-up spot, there was general consensus at the count that he would have won the second vote as the majority of the Labour candidate's next preference votes were for the BNP.

Once again, in an election in the city, an Independent candidate campaigning against asylum seekers grabbed a sizable share of the potential support for the British National Party.

"The people of Stoke will wise up to this scam sooner rather than later," one local BNP activist told Freedom. "The leaflets copy BNP policies, yet no one knows where the money for these campaigns come from."

With the General Election organisational work completed several weeks before the actual contest was due to take place, British National Party Chairman Nick Griffin took two days out of campaigning around the country to attend two very different events, each of major long-term significance.

WORKING TOGETHER: Nick Griffin and Jean-Marie Le Pen discussed ideas for future co-operation between nationalist parties united by opposition to the EU and globalisation, and the Islamification of Europe.

The hand of friendship from across the Channel

ON Sunday May 1st, Jean-Marie Le Pen's Front National turned its annual Joan of Arc parade in Paris into a huge rally for a 'No' vote on the European Constitution. 15,000 FN activists marched through the city centre to a giant open air meeting. The charismatic leader of France's nationalist political party addressed the crowd from a massive platform with a magnificent backdrop image of Joan of Arc - the symbol of French freedom and a natural image for the Front National to use in its campaign to reject the proposed move to a federal EU superstate. The platform included the FN's MEPs, regional deputies, and a small group of invited delegates from the FN's sister parties in Italy, Poland, Spain, Portugal and the UK. Pride of place among the foreign dignitaries was given to BNP chairman Nick Griffin, who Jean-Marie Le Pen introduced to the cheering crowd. After the rally, the BNP delegation were given a guided tour of the FN's Paris headquarters, while Mr. Griffin and M. Le Pen discussed ideas for future co-operation between nationalist parties united by opposition to the EU and globalisation, and the Islamification of Europe.

Living in a world without oil - only nationalism holds the key

NICK Griffin also attended the first major PeakOil conference ever held in Britain.

It took place in Edinburgh, where 500 guests heard presentations by energy experts. PeakOil is the 'shorthand' description given to the theory that the world production of oil is about to reach a peak and then begin irreversible decline. Combined with the rising demand for oil in China, India and the West, this is a recipe for economic and social catastrophe. Among the BNP delegation were BNP webmaster, Steve Blake and Legal Department head, Lee Barnes. Speaking after the conference, Mr Barnes told Freedom that having heard the arguments and the facts, it is clear that the coming PeakOil crisis is going to have a massive impact on political ideas, the economy and the lives of people in the developed world. "For the politicians to have failed to grasp the importance of what is about to happen and to develop strategies to minimise its impact, is nothing short of criminal incompetence." Nick Griffin also commended the conference organisers on helping to spread awareness of this vital subject, and pledged that the BNP would take the looming energy crisis into very careful consideration as we continue to hone our policy proposals: "Already, sections of our new 2005

Manifesto, Rebuilding British Democracy, propose policies which would be of immense help in minimising the impact of the PeakOil crisis.

"If only a fraction of the predictions made by geologists come to pass, then some of our proposals - such as the creation of a Ministry of Finance to oversee our programme of economic regeneration, and replacing oil-based agri-business with a huge shift to smaller, organic, family-run farms - will become matters not of political choice but of national survival."

Steve Blake confirmed the seriousness of the situation: "The debate is not about whether it will happen, or whether it will change the world. It is only about when it will happen and whether the transition will be disastrous or just very painful.

"The end of perpetual growth economics will either be the thing that gives us nationalists our best opportunity to come to power, or we will have to deal with it not long after we do. Either way, this is an issue we cannot afford to ignore."

THE LOOMING CRISIS: What will happen when oil supplies run out?

FACE TO FACE: British National Party candidate for Rossendale & Darwen, Tony Wentworth, meets his Conservative counterpart, Nigel Adams, while canvassing in Rawtenstall. The constituency was featured every night for 3 weeks on SkyTV but Tony barely got a mention, so his 3.9% and defeat of the media-puffed Greens and UKIP was an excellent performance.

COURAGE: The British National Party candidate for Knowsley North and Sefton, Mike McDermott, calmly walks past demonstrators at a hustings in Knowsley. Local residents had voted to hear Mike speak after being appalled by the antics of the anti-BNP thugs outside the hall.

Changing public perception

AFTER A General Election it is important to take time out to reflect on the voters' verdict. As far as Freedom is concerned, the role of this newspaper within the British National Party is to promote an image of the BNP to the public, countering the lies and deception that our opponents push in their literature or manage to get published in the local and national media.

Whether we have been successful can, in the main, be determined by the size of the vote our candidates secured in their constituencies, but feedback from the public is also an important indicator.

Throughout the four-week campaign, there was a steady stream of calls and emails to the Freedom office from people inquiring about the BNP. I also manned a telephone information line and canvassed in Barking which all helped to provide a fair snapshot of the public's perception of our party.

Disappointingly, the same indictment came from all three sources of information and that was that the BNP is perceived as a one-issue party. This was despite the publication of our excellent manifesto, regarded by many political pundits as the most comprehensive and broadly-based document produced by any party during the election.

Five years ago, the image of the British National Party in most peoples' minds was male, extreme in political viewpoint and aggressive in nature - "skinhead nazi thugs" as The Sun and Daily Mail would gleefully report. Thankfully, despite the best efforts of our opponents in the media, that image doesn't now ring true to the public. This change in perception was achieved through a concerted effort to portray the BNP as it really is in our publications and literature. The whole process took time but the end result has been well worthwhile.

Now we must move on to change the perception of being a single issue party. Immigration is just one of many policies foisted on countries by one-world politicians. It is their goal of globalisation that nationalism opposes so we must promote ALL our policies against this destructive creed showing that our philosophy encompasses every single facet of political life from the economy through to the environment.

The friends of Stalin within our unions

SO Chris Keates, the general secretary of the NASUWT union, says no teacher should be allowed to hold membership of the British National Party.

He says the teachers' union should join with the police, prison officers and the probation service in barring BNP members from being able to pursue any of these professions.

Of course, it is not rank and file teachers, policemen or prison staff who campaign for such an exclusion, but a tiny coterie of extreme left-wing zealots who are pushing their own personal agendas.

If their politics were laid bare before the public, it would indeed be they themselves who would be losing their jobs, because the totalitarian Stalinism that they advocate saw 20 million people butchered after the last war, and is anathema to the British people.

ST GEORGE'S MILE: Better known for its Golden Mile, BNP activists in Blackpool made sure that the town celebrated St. George's Day with a display of flags that stretched for a mile along Highfield Road. The job was carried out at one o'clock in the morning with the help of two pairs of ladders and seven willing pairs of hands.

No common sense

COMMON sense in this country is non-existent. It is excluded from current debates by mindless bureaucracy and media-driven political correctness.

The case of the teacher trying to stop thugs terrorising her neighbourhood is a case in question. The idiocy of our judicial system freely ignores the terrible injustice done to this woman and her family, and offers no protection or help at any point despite her cries for help!

I despair, society seems happy to protect the wrong-doer yet prepared to leave the victim vulnerable.

The fundamental problem in the UK today is that the public only reacts in a knee-jerk manner to politically correct or mindless media directed campaigns.

Steven Ashenford, Telford.

They're taking our jobs

FOR the last ten years I have worked at the Electrolux (Flymo) factory in Newton Aycliffe, Co Durham.

Currently the firm employs 300 temporary staff of which 130 have come from Poland.

All of the local workers feel their jobs are being taken from them. When they go to the local jobcentre they are told there are no vacancies at Flymo, yet every week new Polish workers arrive to start work.

Foreign labour is being used by Electrolux to save on overtime and shift allowance because migrants work 24/7 for the same flat rate.

Our union Amicus, of which I am a member, are standing by and letting this happen. By next year, Flymo's workforce will either be all Polish, or the factory will have closed all together and moved to Poland.

Name and Address supplied.

Christianity is not PC

THE Church of Scotland has reached a new low with membership down 60% from 1970. The Catholic Church of Scotland has also seen congregations fall 20% over the past 10 years.

This decline is hardly surprising when in today's society it is frowned upon to send cards depicting the birth of Christ or to mention Christmas.

Society has made Christianity in itself politically incorrect.

Ratting on school dinners

THE quality of school dinners is currently in the news and whilst Ruth Kelly is quite happy to say that there is extra money available she is unwilling to place a ban on junk food in our schools.

Why is she not taking firm action at this opportune time?

Well, the biggest supplier of school dinners in the UK is Scolarest, who are owned by the Compass Group PLC, one of the largest catering firms in the world, owning brands such as Burger King and Harry Ramsdens.

The Chairman of the Compass Group is Sir Francis Mackay who received a knighthood from this government in 2003, and is also a non-executive chairman of the Kingfisher Group, who make donations to the Labour Party.

I smell a rat, and this time it's not in the chicken nuggets!

Stuart Coates, Chelmsford.

A BNP trade union

MOST trade unions in Britain no longer have as their priority the representation of the workers.

Today unions are more interested in promoting a Marxist ideology or campaigning for ethnic minority rights. Workers no longer have anyone to defend their interests, such as saving jobs from being off-shored.

What is needed is for the BNP to start a trade union of its own - a British Workers Union - which would truly represent all British workers and save our jobs and industries from disappearing all together.

Peter Hill, Stoke-on-Trent.

Election observers

THE final indignity forced upon us by Tony Blair and his wretched Labour Government is the requirement of Council of Europe election observers to oversee our flawed postal ballot system.

Britain is now on a par with the banana republics of the Third world and the former Eastern Bloc countries.

Peter Young, Norwich.

Not a single issue party

IMMIGRATION and its cultural, demographic, and housing consequences must continue to be an important issue for the BNP.

But there are other key areas where the party must make its policies known to address all the problems that face our country and they are:

- Our declining industries, trade balance and indebtedness and the threat they pose to employment.

- Lawlessness continuing to get worse, and the politicisation of the police.

- The gradual erosion of our freedoms, and the power of press barons.

- The pensions crisis.

- The energy shortfall and our reliance on foreign supplies.

- The farming crisis and our dependence on imported food - now up to 36%.

The BNP, over the next five years, must prove to the public that we are more than just a single issue party.

Philip Peters, Reigate.

Money in resettlement

TO help bring more people to their senses concerning the need to control immigration you might be interested in publicising what's going on in Leeds.

According to the Land Registry, the property at 1 Park Wood Avenue, Leeds LS11 5RH has been bought by the Angel Group. Now according to Refugee Access: "The Angel Group provides accommodation to asylum seekers dispersed to the region by NASS. It aims to provide and maintain a high standard of accommodation and support to asylum seekers."

The fact that they are willing to spend £78,000 on one house for asylum seekers shows the sort of profits they are making out of the Government through resettlement - and of course the Government's money is actually our money.

I believe this money should be spent on our own people. Thousands of British elderly people die each year from cold related illnesses. We should be putting their welfare first.

Mr. A Jenkins, Leeds.

The new Giles?

FREEDOM gets better and better so it's no surprise that the circulation is breaking all records. We now appear to have our own cartoonist 'Tiger' - excellent. Could he be the new Giles?

Neil Dawes, email

County Council Elections: BNP results round-up

- Lancashire - 21.7% ● Derbyshire - 13.4%
- Leicestershire - 11.0% ● Essex - 10%
- Nottinghamshire - 9.3% ● Hertfordshire - 9.1%
- Cheshire - 6.9% ● North Yorkshire - 5%

THE British National Party's first real foray into county council elections received a good response from voters, especially in a number of new areas for the party.

County council wards are on average three times the size of borough council wards, and as in parliamentary elections, it is much harder for political parties outside of the 'big three' to make an impact because of their limited resources and little or no access to the media. Despite this handicap, five BNP candidates in Burnley were able to attract 17.5% of the votes cast, an excellent achievement and a result that bodes well for next year's local council elections when the media coverage for the Lab/Con/Lib-Dem conglomerate will be less frenetic.

Outside of Burnley, there were other encouraging results in Lancashire with Trevor Dawson and Brian Parker both attracting 13.8% of the vote in Nelson South and Pendle Central respectively and Thomas Boocock polling 13.5% in Pendle East.

In other traditional BNP areas the party did well with Tom Richardson polling 623 (8.3%) in Chigwell & Loughton Broadway and Pat Richardson receiving 768 votes (10%) in Loughton Central, both for Essex County Council.

In Hertfordshire, Stephen McCole polled 571 (9.1%) in Cheshunt Central and Richard Lankester 454 (8.3%) in Waltham Cross.

Derbyshire is a relatively new area for the BNP, so Mike Bailey's 760 votes (13.4%) in Cotmanhay and Sarah Doyle's 754 votes (12%) for Shirebrook & Pleasley were both very good results in virgin territory. Three BNP candidates contesting the Crewe seats for Cheshire County Council managed to average 5% of the vote with John Cornes polling the best vote of the night with his 375 (6.9%) in Crewe North.

Across the county of Leicestershire, the BNP fought 11 seats averaging BEST BNP VOTE: Sharon Wilkinson polled 1363 votes, 22% of those cast in Padiham and Burnley West.

6.5% of the vote. Special mentions due here for Mark Lewis for his 678 votes (11%) in Whitwick, and Stephen Denham for his 521 votes (11%) in Syston Fosse.

In Nottinghamshire, Sadie Graham's 509 votes in Beauvale ward represented 9.3% of the vote, and even in the wilds of North Yorkshire Colin Banner managed a BNP vote of 5% in Pateley Bridge.

For Northamptonshire County Council, Fiona Woodward secured twice the Green Party candidate's vote with her 153 (3.6%) vote share, an excellent first effort for the party in the face of a huge anti-BNP campaign in her Kingsthorpe ward.

DERBYSHIRE: It's the early morning leaflet shift for Sarah Doyle in her Shirebrook and Pleasley ward. The hard work paid off with Sarah polling 754 votes. INSERT: BNP candidate in Northampton, Fiona Woodward.

Labour thugs get BNP a hearing in Knowsley

A RESIDENTS' association voted to hear a speech from a British National Party candidate to show their disgust at the bully-boy tactics of a gang of Labour Party thugs.

The meeting in a village hall in the parliamentary seat of Knowsley North and Sefton East, was besieged by 40 placard-waving demonstrators. The BNP candidate, Michael McDermott, ran a gauntlet of chants of abuse as he entered the building, which led to confusion amongst the audience who voted not to allow him to address them because they mistakenly thought the protesters outside the building were BNP supporters.

When they realised the group was in fact demonstrating against his presence, they took another vote, and this time it was to allow him to speak. The Knowsley Community Association, which called the meeting, said they were surprised at the amount of protest the meeting had provoked. Secretary Mike Birchall said: "We are an apolitical organisation. The invitation was extended to anyone who was standing in the constituency. "I have received a continuous stream of threats over the past couple of days in the form of intimidating phone calls telling me to cancel the meeting. I wasn't frightened by it, but at the same time it wasn't very nice."

Free speech censored in Wokingham

by Bob Gertner

RICHARD Colbourne, the British National Party's candidate for Wokingham was barred from the local Methodist chapel where a General Election hustings took place.

Candidates from Labour, the Tories and Lib-Dems were already in the building when Richard Colbourne tried to enter but was stopped by the Rev David Hodgson who was chairing the event. He was adamant that the BNP candidate would not be allowed to address the audience.

Richard told the vicar that he was himself a committed Christian and it was his democratic right to take part in the hustings as he was a candidate in the election, but the po-faced cleric still refused him access.

But they're a bit more democratic in Wrexham

by Bill Murray

AT AN election forum held in St. Giles Church in Wrexham, conducted by Cannon Geoffrey Marshall BA and supported by the Wrexham Church Leaders Fellowship, BNP candidate, John Walker showed great potential for being a future MP for the town.

St. Giles Church was packed with members of the public asking questions of John Walker for his first speech in public and he made the British National Party supporters in the hall feel very proud.

John answered all the questions without any hesitation and gained consistent rounds of applause and nods of approval from the audience.

The responses from the Labour candidate, Ian Lucas, was received in stony silence as he tried to argue that immigration was good for Britain. He said that the people of Wrexham should embrace cultural diversity as it would enrich their society.

Bradford Branch election meeting

by Nick Cass

AROUND 100 BNP members and supporters attended the pre-election meeting of the party's Bradford branch.

Local businessman and BNP candidate for Bradford West, Paul Cromie, chaired the meeting and outlined the exciting times that lay ahead for the party over the coming weeks, months and years.

Paul then introduced the new Bradford BNP organiser, Darren Mamby, and told the audience;

"Darren will make a fantastic organiser. He has already shown his total commitment, and in recent weeks he has been busy canvassing for the local parish council elections. "With the political experience of our councillors, and the dedication shown by organisers and activists, Bradford is going to take off like never before". Other speakers for the evening were Rotherham dynamo Marlene Guest, Young BNP campaigner Sarah Caine, Bradford South candidate, Jim Lewthwaite and Tom Linden who was standing for the party in Shipley.

BRADFORD STH: Jim Lewthwaite.

By Bob Gertner

JULIAN Leppert, British National Party candidate for Epping Forest, took part in an 'On The Hustings' election forum organised by Epping's church council.

Labour Party candidate, Bambos Charalambous, was livid that the BNP was being allowed to participate and at first refused to sit on the top table with Julian. He then left the hall in a huff when the Catholic priest chairing the meeting carried on with the proceedings regardless of his protest.

Each candidate explained their party's policy and it was evident from the start that Julian was different from the others with his more direct approach and unscripted answers.

Later there was a debate on issues requested by the audience, including crime, immigration and housing. Here Julian shone through with his flowing, non-politically correct responses leaving it plain for all to see that the other's policies were nearly identical and only the BNP had original and

BNP rallies to defend freedom of speech

MORE than 1,000 British National Party supporters cheered BNP leader Nick Griffin when he appeared in Halifax, in West Yorkshire, to be charged with four offences under Britain's draconian race relation laws.

Nick thanked those attending the impromptu 'Defend Free Speech' rally before launching an attack on Tony Blair and New Labour for turning Britain into a banana republic resembling Robert Mugabe's Zimbabwe. He pledged not to be intimidated by those seeking to stifle debate on the growth of Islam in Britain:

"I will continue to tell the truth and warn the British people of the dangers they face from Islamic extremism, even if that means going to prison." The politically-motivated decision to charge Nick Griffin just as the General Election campaign got under way, backfired spectacularly with the media coverage of the morning's events portraying plenty of positive images of the British National Party.
